Works in Progress

- Victims and Offenders This piece will expand upon the binary of victim and offender which I lay out and critique in Punishment as Protection. Specifically, it will examine why the criminal law, both on the books and on the ground, divides parties into this antipodal categories, and argues that the reality of many areas of the criminal law, particularly vice and sex crimes, is much more complex. Effective policies in this area require a breakdown of this binary.
- Policing Sex. This will explore police enforcement of prostitution and trafficking laws, and other sex crimes. Since these laws are under-enforced, the discretion and potential selective enforcement that police (and prosecutors) have is even more salient, and potentially problematic, than in other areas of the criminal law.
